KASBAH DU TOUBKAL

MOROCCO'S PREMIER MOUNTAIN RETREAT

For many years Kasbah du Toubkal has been fortunate in its worldwide media coverage and the splendid comments of contented guests, but even so early into the new year, Hermes, the Greek god of travel, (although if you were Roman it would have been Mercury) has been smiling on us, as a sampling of recent publications shows. Just click on the logos to see what awaits you in Morocco's High Atlas Mountains.

The Telegraph TRAVEL

8/10 Telegraph expert rating

This hilltop house-turned-hotel – way up in the Atlas Mountains – is reached on foot from the village of Imlil, and those who make the effort are rewarded with some of North Africa's best views.

The World's Most Extraordinary
High-Altitude Hotels

From lodges that disappear into the mountainous terrain to industrial-chic retreats, these properties treat winter as a design opportunity rather than a sporting event

Guided ascents toward Jebel Toubkal, North Africa's 13,670-foot ceiling, begin with mint tea ceremonies that feel like sensible preparation rather than ritual. By the time visitors are back under hand-woven blankets with a tagine on the table, the place has made its case: travel can be restorative and consequential at the same time.

The 2026 travel hot list: Thrills, chills and unadulterated splendour

In a time when stories of queues at Everest and litter at Fuji are commonplace, it's time to look to unexplored landscapes where journeys not only challenge the trekker but are prized for their low impact and community-boosting effects. In Morocco's Mount Toubkal, just 90 minutes from Marrakech in the High Atlas Mountains, Kasbah Du Toubkal
